As a strategic corporate tax attorney, Steve Good is a trusted advisor for companies pursuing transactions that need to be structured in a tax efficient manner, both for the company and for its shareholders/investors. He is a partner in the firm's Taxation, Transactions, and Corporate Practices, working with business owners, private equity investors, hedge funds, and company executives, as well as in-house corporate and tax counsel.

Steve is well known for having a big picture view as well as technical tax knowledge, and his years of deal experience enable him to add value to a tax strategy discussion from the first hour. Due to the business focus of his tax practice, and his 15 years as managing partner then CEO of the Gardere law firm (which combined with Foley in 2018), Steve understands what it takes to run a successful business and how to solve problems. Coupled with his financial and corporate tax background, Steve provides clients with practical legal advice that efficiently addresses their business needs.

Steve currently serves on the board of The Cooper Institute, a world-recognized medical research institute. He also served for six years on the Executive Committee of the Dallas Regional Chamber, where he chaired the Public Policy Advisory Counsel. In that role, he and the committee identified and addressed the policy issues that are most important to the North Texas economy, such as infrastructure developments, water, and transportation. As a result of that experience, Steve understands that for many clients, these big picture policy issues influence future company decisions and, at times, are as important as their individual legal issues.
