Rick Ali is an Associate in the firm's Commercial Litigation practice group, representing clients in a wide range of complex commercial litigation disputes in both state and federal courts, including:

- Oil and gas disputes
- Contract disputes
- Product liability disputes
- Construction disputes
- Class action defense
- Copyright infringement
- Securities litigation

Leveraging his former experience as an entrepreneur, Rick is committed to providing strategic, results-driven advocacy tailored to each client's business objectives. Rick's diverse litigation experience and commitment to excellence allow him to navigate complex legal issues and deliver effective solutions for clients facing high-stakes disputes.

Before joining the firm, Rick gained valuable experience as a Summer Associate in Foley's Houston office. Rick also served as a judicial intern to the Honorable Rabeea Collier in the 113th District Court of Harris County. While in law school, Rick served as Editor-in-Chief of the South Texas Law Review at South Texas College of Law Houston, where he honed his research, writing, and leadership skills.
