Ryan Huettel is driven by helping his clients in commercial litigation and arbitration matters. He concentrates his practice on assisting business organizations with state-wide and national regulations, commercial real estate, and creditor rights matters.

Ryan's extensive courtroom experience, attention to detail, and client-first mindset allows him to forge relationships and resolve proceedings in a cordial and expeditious manner.

Prior to joining Foley, Ryan worked as an associate at a prominent Chicago trial firm, where his practice concentrated on complex medical malpractice, products liability, and commercial litigation cases. While at Loyola University Chicago School of Law, Ryan received a student-attorney license and represented minors as a child representative and guardian ad litem. He also provided direct support to domestic violence survivors as a member of Loyola's Domestic Violence Practicum.
