Brandon is a seasoned litigator with experience handling construction claims throughout Florida. He has earned a reputation for effectively litigating a broad range of construction cases, including those involving allegations of water intrusion, structural failures, design deficiencies, and disputes between contractors and subcontractors. He also regularly advises on risk transfer, indemnity and defense obligations, and offers practical, outcome-driven strategies tailored to the construction industry.

Brandon's practice is devoted to representing contractors, developers, and design professionals in resolving complex construction disputes and mitigating legal risks tied to construction defect claims and related commercial conflicts. He delivers efficient, strategic counsel through all phases of litigation, from pre-suit through trial.

Before focusing on construction litigation, Brandon gained experience at several respected Florida law firms practicing in a variety of areas, including personal injury and professional liability, providing him with a well-rounded litigation background that benefits his construction clients facing multifaceted disputes.
