Geoffrey Raux is a commercial litigator who represents a variety of clients in the business and health care sectors. His practice concentrates on complex litigation in federal and state courts throughout the country. He has significant trial and arbitration experience, including litigating cases to verdict. He also has appeared frequently before federal and state appellate courts and has secured significant appellate victories.

Geoff has significant experience in health care, regularly representing providers and suppliers in high stakes disputes, including with commercial and government payors. Geoff's health care strength extends to administrative actions before state and federal regulatory bodies, with a substantial background in Medicare and Medicaid appeals and reimbursement litigation. Geoff also guides health care companies in internal investigations and risk mitigation efforts, and he regularly represents them in connection with government enforcement actions and investigations.

Geoff's practice also includes commercial disputes in a variety of sectors. He regularly handles complex contractual claims and business torts, in disputes involving licensing issues, private company and shareholder disputes, and securities litigation. Geoff has handled bet-the-company litigations and brings both zealous advocacy and a pragmatic approach to the matters he handles, recognizing and balancing the business considerations that his client's face.
