Thomas L. Shriner Jr. concentrates his practice in commercial, corporate, and public law litigation and has an extensive appellate practice in state and federal courts. He also has substantial experience in the bankruptcy courts. Tom is a partner in the firm's Commercial Litigation, Appellate, and Bankruptcy & Business Reorganizations Practices.

Tom has litigated cases involving business acquisitions and shareholder disputes. He represents banks in lender liability and loan participation cases. He has litigated agreements not to compete; pension, insurance, and dealership disputes; real estate and water rights cases; and a variety of claims under the UCC. Tom's public law experience includes defendants' and plaintiffs' cases under the major civil rights statutes, including defending large class actions, and several plaintiffs' cases under the Fair Housing Act.

Tom Shriner is a fellow of the American College of Trial Lawyers and has tried scores of cases in a long litigation career. He has handled about every conceivable type of either business-related or public law civil litigation. Tom has specialized in closely held business disputes, often between family members and family trusts, as well as shareholder derivative litigation, and he has defended RICO and other business tort cases, many of them with control or survival of the company on the line. Tom has also tried many constitutional and civil rights cases, representing both sides in cases under the Fair Housing Act, the Voting Rights Act, and various Equal Protection Clause cases, including an inter-district school desegregation case and several congressional redistricting cases. Most of the significant cases that Tom has tried have been referred either from his business-law colleagues, knowing how quickly he gets to the heart of significant legal issues and sets up opportunities for summary disposition without having to take the case to trial, or from lawyers outside of the firm — including non-litigators — who have heard about his work from judges and other lawyers, including former opponents. While Tom loves to try cases, he knows that clients are less interested in getting to trial than in disposing of a big case and reducing or eliminating risk as early and inexpensively as possible. Thus, Tom is always alert to the chances, both within the judicial system and outside of it, to make the case go away.
