Kevin M. Shuler's practice is focused on general corporate and securities law matters, including mergers and acquisitions, corporate finance transactions, securities law compliance counseling, and public and private securities offerings. He represents a broad range of clients with diverse interests and needs, from public companies to closely held and newly formed corporations, in a wide range of industries such as finance, insurance, technology, and manufacturing. He is a member of the firm's Transactional & Securities Practice.

Kevin regularly advises both early stage and established companies on a variety of corporate and business matters, including entity formation and organizational matters, venture capital and private equity debt and equity financings, mergers and acquisitions, and general corporate governance matters. He also represents both public and private businesses in strategic transactions, joint ventures, licensing transactions, and collaboration programs. Kevin routinely works with funds, issuers, investors, and underwriters in public and private offering transactions, and advises public companies on SEC compliance, reporting, and governance matters.
