Joshua Skora focuses his practice on representing public and closely-held health care companies, including durable medical equipment suppliers and manufacturers, pharmacies, home health and hospice agencies, home infusion providers, ambulatory surgical centers, laboratories, diagnostic testing facilities, telemedicine providers, behavioral health and substance abuse providers, skilled nursing facilities, long-term care facilities, and other ancillary health care providers.

As outside general counsel for many clients, Joshua collaborates with attorneys across the firm to address a wide range of client needs both domestically and internationally. His counsel is highly regarded for his comprehensive grasp of business and litigation risks, navigating the intricate regulatory landscape of health care, and effectively addressing regulatory challenges.

Joshua advises clients on intricate corporate and regulatory matters and disputes, including fraud, waste, and abuse issues, compliance strategies, contract negotiations, reimbursement matters, Medicare/Medicaid enrollment, audits and appeals for overpayments, internal investigations, payor disputes, and inquiries from federal and state regulatory bodies.

In addition to his regulatory practice, Joshua maintains an active role in transactional matters, guiding clients through acquisitions, sales, corporate reorganizations, and joint ventures.

Joshua's experience has been recognized by peer-reviewed industry guides, including Chambers USA:

“Joshua is absolutely exceptional. He dug deep into the issues to uncover the core problem, built a strategy and road map to get us to the goal, and then delivered.”

“Joshua is very creative, knowledgeable and all-around excellent.”

“Joshua helps me understand the effects of regulation on our business.”
