Teresa Taylor draws on a wide-ranging background in regulatory enforcement and white-collar defense to help clients address their most challenging legal matters. Her practice centers on trade sanctions and export controls, including matters involving import-export regulations, national security laws, international trade restrictions, cross-border investigations, foreign corruption, and money laundering.

Clients rely on Teresa to mitigate legal risk and pursue discreet, strategic resolutions. She defends executives, corporations, and their owners in investigations and high-stakes litigation before federal courts and agencies, including the U.S. Department of Justice, Department of Commerce, Department of the Treasury, Securities and Exchange Commission, and other regulatory bodies. Her work often spans multiple jurisdictions and enforcement authorities.

Teresa's experience includes financial services regulation, governance, compliance, and litigation strategy. She has handled matters involving civil appeals, constitutional and administrative law, and emerging areas such as cryptocurrency enforcement. Teresa also advises clients on complex regulatory issues and responses to developments across the legal and enforcement landscape.

Prior to joining Foley, Teresa was a partner in the Washington, D.C. office of a national law firm and previously served as a senior attorney at the U.S. Department of the Treasury, IRS. Earlier in her career, she clerked for three U.S. District Court judges in the Western District of Virginia.
