Jesse Neil is a seasoned health care attorney who leverages his unique background in both health care operations and public policy to deliver practical, strategic guidance to health care providers, senior management teams, and corporate boards across the United States.

With significant experience guiding hospital systems through merger, acquisition, and restructuring processes, Jesse helps health care clients adapt their governance and operational structures to meet the needs of today's health care landscape. He also offers deep familiarity with state and federal health care laws and advises health care companies, investors, and lenders on avoiding and resolving compliance and regulatory issues related to the Stark Law, Anti-Kickback Statute (AKS), False Claims Act (FCA), HIPAA, licensing, and more.

Earlier in his career, Jesse spent almost a decade as a member of the in-house legal team at one of the largest publicly traded hospital companies in the United States, where he provided day-to-day guidance to corporate departments, hospitals, clinics, and ancillary service providers throughout the country. He simultaneously managed the company's public policy advocacy strategy, which involved monitoring key policy developments and advising the company on operational risks and effective business strategies.

Jesse previously served as an assistant attorney general for the Tennessee Attorney General's Office, where he led investigations into and prosecuted actions brought under the Stark Law, AKS, and False Claims Act. He began his career as an advisor to former U.S. Senate Majority Leader William H. Frist. Prior to Foley, Jesse was a partner in the Nashville office of a multinational law firm.
